

CHAPTER XV

Editor-in-Chief

The Editor-in-Chief appointed by the board of directors for the association journal, Journal of Diabetes and Endocrine Practice, is the publication's editorial leader who has the responsibility for its operations and policies. The Editor-in-Chief appoints the associate editors and editorial board, approving the publication's layout, design, style, writing editorial pieces to contribute to the publication, making final decisions about which cases, articles and photographs to publish and attending meetings with the publisher or publication board to discuss issues and plans for the publication. The Editor-in-Chief is not a member of board of directors but will be asked to attend the board meeting upon request of the board. The term is 3 years. A written contract between the association and editor-in-chief detailing his duties and the financial remuneration will be mutually signed.
